Char Grilled Pineapple, Se Busca Mezcal Joven

In the agave fields of Jalisco, Jimador Juan loved his homemade tapache. One wild night, he danced with his agave plants, fell in the mud, and challenged a thunderstorm to a dance-off. Drunk but determined, he saved his agave. Juan learned that even in a crazy tapache moment, you can be a hero.

Once there was a playful bottle of Pisco named Pablo. Pablo loved to play jokes at parties, and one day, he switched all the alarm clocks with rubber chickens at a college student's party. The students woke up to the sound of squawking chickens and couldn't stop laughing. Pablo became a legend for turning ordinary gatherings into uproarious fiestas!

Don Julio Sous Vide Tomato, Bell Peppers, Ancho Verde, Coriander, Cochi Americano, Suze

It is widely believed that Pico de Gallo dates back to the Aztecs in central Mexico. However, the name did not originate there. Pico de Gallo translates to 'The Rooster's Beak', possibly due to the way it was consumed; pinched with the thumb and forefinger, forming the shape of a rooster's beak. Or maybe just because it's 'clucking' delicious!

South American folklore includes a legend of a one-legged female vampire who hides in the woods disguised as a beautiful maiden and loves nothing more than luring unsuspecting hunters or loggers deep into the jungle, before attacking them and sucking their blood.

Se Busca Joven Mezcal, Don Julio Reposado, Fresh Lime Juice, Raspberry Puree, Aperol, Egg White Foam, Saline

The sap of the agave plant is collected and fermented to produce 'pulque' an alcoholic beverage, which after the distillation process, becomes mezcal. The word mezcal comes from Nahuatl; the language of the Aztecs, which to this day is still used by nearly 2 million people, in central Mexico.
